A full harvest moon Friday shone upon 700 Boy Scouts of America gathered at Soldier Hollow, site of the 2002 Winter Olympic Nordic events.

The Scouts gathered to perform a massive service project.

Three districts, Provo, Wasatch and Alpine, participated. Each district was made up of seven to eight LDS Church stake units. The gathering was divided into three work areas.

Scouts removed dead wood, rocks, old fences, and planted willows, assisting in erosion control.

The service earned participants three service patches, according to Gerald Carter of the Utah National Parks Council.

Scouts also helped groom ski trails.

"The track is ready to be seeded next week," said Kevin Jardine, Soldier Hollow project manager for the Salt Lake Organizing Committee. "The Scouts helped prepare it for seeding."

Several Scouts expressed enthusiasm over the opportunity of helping to prepare an Olympic venue.

"I like it here, coming out and earning service hours," said Wayne Giles.

Last summer, camp was in Oregon, at Camp Merriweather, by the Pacific Ocean, said Scoutmaster Mike Walch, of the Highland District. "This summer, Soldier Hollow."

More than 45,000 Scouts are planning next year's Jamboree in Fillmore, Utah. "This will be a celebration of all the work we have completed," said Jeff McClellan, Scoutmaster of Troop 544. "For now, the enthusiastic energy of the Scouts at Soldier Hollow will prepare the way."

to replace it. The fact that there is no realistic substitute means we would have to make do with less—a lot less.

Energy of any kind would be more expensive. Let's say taxes on gasoline are raised by a modest $0.25 per gallon. If you are a farmer, your business is so energy

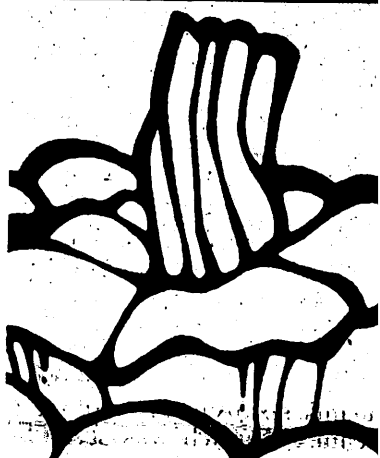

Would you like to know how to kill the environmental movement once and for all? It's easy, just implement the Kyoto Protocol. If our economy took a nose-dive the American public would revolt and punish those deemed responsible. An economic depression would destroy the environmental movement.
